Dirty Dealings A. J. Adams 2020-02-05 I could've strangled her. She knew it too because she stepped away quickly. "Touch me and I'll have you!" she snarled. "Bruja mala leche! What the fuck do you think you're playing at! You can't push me around!" "Sure I can." Her eyes were slate grey, the same colour as the sky, and just as cold. "I need help, and you're going to give it." "What the hell are you talking about?" "I've got a situation. I need someone who isn't afraid of murder and mayhem." I should have charmed her, offered to help and maybe it would have settled it, but I was too mad to even consider it. "Help you? Over my dead body!" She shrugged. "We can do it that way, too." She took out her phone. "I'll call you soon, hopefully within the hour. If you still refuse, I call Smith." The eyes were hard. "I'd rather not shop you, because I hate that bastard, but I will if you make me." I gave her my number. I mean, I wanted to kill her, but in London they notice things like bodies in the street.
